

Chocolate Rum Balls ~ Mix, Roll, Rum, Repeat

Mix & Roll:

- 4 cups (400g) cake crumbs (whatever's left from your latest baking triumph — or supermarket specials, no judgement)
 - ½ cup cocoa (good quality, because you deserve it)
 - ¼ cup apricot jam (warmed — because cold jam is stubborn)
 - 1 cup dark rum (to taste — and yes, tasting is mandatory)
 - 2 tbsp water (to keep it just respectable)
 - Chocolate sprinkles (for that final glittery, grown-up sparkle)

The Play-by-Play:

1. Toss your cake crumbs and cocoa into a big mixing bowl. (Big enough to dance a little rum jig, you know?)
 2. Add the warmed jam, dark rum, and water. Pause to appreciate the intoxicating aroma. (Optional: sip a little rum yourself. Chef's tax.)
 3. Mix everything together until it looks like the kind of dough even your grandma would approve of — sticky but still rollable.
 4. Scoop up about 2 teaspoons' worth and roll it into a neat little ball. Repeat. Meditate. Reflect. Snack. Repeat again.
 5. Roll each ball in a sea of chocolate sprinkles until it's so coated it could survive a chocolate storm.
 6. Chill in the fridge for 2 hours — the balls, not you (but hey, you've earned a break too).

Note:

- Makes about 45 bite-sized rum bombs of happiness.
 - Best enjoyed chilled — and responsibly. (They do contain rum after all — yes, even the ones you sneak at breakfast.)

Pro Tips:

- Swap the chocolate sprinkles for desiccated coconut if you're feeling fancy.
- They freeze like a dream — if you can stop yourself from eating them all fresh.

- Serving suggestion: pile them high on a plate and watch adults turn into giggling children.

 Closing Thought:

"They say money can't buy happiness — but it can buy rum and chocolate, and that's close enough."
